CHEVROLET MOTOR COMPANY OPENS ATLANTA PLANT

The formal opening during the past week of the Chevrolet assembly plant at Atlanta, Georgia, coming at a time when a similar plant is under construction in Kansas City, is further indication that there is to be no let down in the company's extensive sales program.

The Mammoth Atlanta plant, which has been in operation since May 1, is capable of turning out 500 cars a day, and was the eighth assembly plant to be opened by Chevrolet in this country. The Kansas City plant with the same capacity will be the ninth.

Atlanta last week welcomed their first opportunity of visiting the great assembly plant, and seeing the magic Chevrolet assembly line produce the world's most popular automobile from a set of accurately unrelated parts. Atlanta newspapers welcomed Chevrolet to the Southeast and viewed the plant as a Southern institution. It was mainly by southern contracting agents that built it in four months, one week and six hours several days before the contracted time had expired. It serves the southeastern market exclusively supplying cars to the dealers of Georgia, North and South Carolina, Alabama and Florida. A southern, W. S. "Coke" Roberts has been placed at the head of this, the newest, and one of the greatest of the south's industrial institutions.

The plant covers 32 acres and occupies 10,000 square feet of floor space. There are five buildings, and it is mainly one the Fisher Body Company is using 150 by 750 square feet of space to build their famous bodies for the Chevrolet chassis.

The plant is ideally located with the tracks of the Southern Railroad paralleling its leading dock. Truck service for 300 freight cars is provided.
